in the vineyard : Dryland, trellised vines with an average age of 15 years experienced moderate summers with low night temperatures, cooling breezes from the nearby Atlantic Ocean, and cold winters.

in the cellar : Grapes were harvested at optimum ripeness (between 21° and 23° Balling) with a new technology machine in the coolness of the early morning. Skin contact was allowed for four hours at 10°C, and only gravity-drained free-run juice was used for temperature-controlled fermentation in stainless-steel tanks. The wine matured on its lees for three months before racking and bottling.
