in the vineyard : Picking is done by hand only in the early mornings to keep the temperature as cold as possible. Grapes are de-stemmed and crushed before being transferred into a press where the juice is drained immediately and separated from skins.

about the harvest: Harvesting starts mid- to end January with the blocks selected for Rosé. With sufficient rain in the winter months and moderately warm weather from November to January the vineyards were in perfect condition with yields and quality above par.

in the cellar : The juice is clarified by means of floatation and racked to a fermentation tank.
